ABSTRACT

The content of journals, bibliographic standardization, abstracting and indexing services, and international editorial cooperation were discussed at the May 16-18, 1972 symposium. The program included the following topics: (1) survey of periodical publishing in documentation, librarianship and archives; (2) improvement of editing and publishing in these fields by improving quality of content, achieving greater uniformity in presentation, reducing delay in publication, and improving distribution; (3) improvement of coverage of professional literature in abstracting and indexing journals and better relations between professional journals and abstracting and indexing journals; and (4) promotion of international cooperation between editors of journals including a need for increased contacts between editors, assistance to editors in developing countries, organization of study trips for editors, more use of foreign authors in national journals, and the need for some method of maintaining permanent consultation between editors. The lists of participants, papers distributed, and materials displayed at the symposium are included as appendices. (Author/SJ)

SYMPOSIUM OF EDITORS OF DOCUMENTATION, LIBRARY AND ARCHIVES JOURNALS

Paris, Unesco House, 16-18 May 1972

SUMMARY REPORT

INTRODUCTION

The Symposium of Editors of Documentation, Library and Archives Journals was held at Unesco House from 16 to 18 May 1972.

It was attended by 55 editors of documentation, library or archives journals from 29 countries. A list of participants is attached (Annex 1).

The participants unanimously elected Madame Honore' (France) as Chairman, Mr. Borchardt (Australia) as Vice-Chairman and Mr. E. Dudley (United Kingdom) as Rapporteur.

A background paper, prepared by Dr. H. Coblans and a number of other documents were discussed at the meeting (see Annex 2).

During the three days of the meeting, an exhibition of 260 professional periodicals from 55 countries was organized (see Annex 3).

PROGRAMME

The programme included the following topics:

1. Survey of periodical publishing in documentation, librarianship and archives.

2. Improvement of editing and publishing in these fields, by :
   (a) improving quality of contents of articles, news and information, etc.
   (b) achieving greater uniformity in presentation (bibliographical references, transliteration, authors' abstracts, etc.);

(c) reducing delay in publication of manuscripts;
(d) improving distribution, etc.

3. Improvement of coverage of professional literature in abstracting and indexing journals, and better relations between professional journals and abstracting and indexing journals.

4. Promotion of international co-operation between editors of journals :

(a) need for increased contacts between editors; assistance to editors of journals in developing countries;
(b) publication in national journals of more articles by foreign authors;
(c) organization of study trips, bilateral fellowships for editors, etc.;
(d) need for some method of maintaining permanent consultation between editors (e.g. creation of committees or sections in the interested non-governmental organizations or a joint committee of editors).

OPENING ADDRESS

The meeting was opened by the Director of the Department of Documentation, Libraries and Archives who stated that the aim of the symposium was to seek ways and means of improving the periodical literature of the profession and its bibliographical control and to obtain closer co-operation and co-ordination between documentation, library and archives journals, with a view to increasing the exchange of information, achieving more unified methods of presentation and encouraging greater use of authors' abstracts. He referred to the high number of periodicals published, the scatter of relevant articles in journals not primarily concerned with the profession and the consequent difficulty of obtaining complete coverage of the literature in abstracting and indexing journals. He stressed the need for greater uniformity in presentation to meet the demands made by the increasing use of computers for processing and storing information. He pointed out that, however much they may differ in many respects, documentation, librarianship and archives have much in common as they are all involved in the collection, organization and conservation of documents and making their contents known by subject analysis and dissemination. He referred to the co-ordinating rôle that the competent international non-governmental organizations (NGOs) could make in bringing editors of professional literature together at regular intervals.

GENERAL DISCUSSION

Dr. Coblans introduced his previously circulated background paper. He stressed two main problems : definition of the scope of the subject area and establishment of what is to be included under the loose term "periodical".

Content of journals

The Symposium considered means of improving the content of journals. Differing views were expressed on the need for republication of articles, delegates from countries with little professional literature noting that "borrowing" from developed countries was necessary. A delegate from the U.S.A. agreed with what he called this "useful redundancy". In some cases better abstracting could obviate duplication and translation. Several delegates referred to the need to publish the title pages and table of contents of each issue of a periodical also in a widely-known language. There was some discussion on the need for editors to inform themselves of the requirements and needs of readers.

The participants from the USSR and Cuba reported on the library and professional publication position in their countries and stressed the need to consider not only the techniques of periodical production but also the information content of journals which should be directed towards human progress and peaceful international co-operation.

During the discussion which followed, problems of definition and terminology and the listing of journals were raised. It was reported that the International Federation for Documentation (FID) hoped to publish a revision of its list of journals in the field in 1973 or 1974.

Participants discussed at some length the relevance of the Symposium to archives work. Delegates from France and Italy noted that the abstracts journals cover little in this field. The question of the place of archives at the Symposium was explained as resulting from the decision of Member Governments of Unesco to group documentation, libraries and archives together. It was also noted that many technical problems - e.g. indexing, classification, preservation and reprography - were also of direct interest to archivists.

Standardization

The need for improvement in bibliographical presentation was considered and the work of the International Serials Data System (ISDS) of UNISIST was succinctly presented. ISDS had been set up by agreement between the French Government and Unesco and would help to resolve the difficulty of identifying periodicals by assigning to each one an accepted abbreviation of its title and an International Standard Serials Number (ISSN), the work of formulation being undertaken in collaboration with the International Organization for Standardization (ISO) and with the competent national bodies. In this connexion, the work of ISO on abbreviations of words in titles of periodicals was referred to.

The Symposium thought that the work of ISO was not sufficiently well known and its recommendations were not widely applied even at the national level. The need for wider publicity on existing standards was stressed and Unesco was asked to arrange for the preparation of a practical guide to the ISO standards presented in such a way that their purpose and justification (giving illustrative examples) are made clear. The distribution of this guide should be actively promoted and brought to the attention of the relevant editors.

Problems of transliteration and transphonation were discussed. It was thought that names of institutions should be left in the original language with translations in brackets.

It was agreed that author abstracts of articles at least in the original language should be published but that translation of abstracts into other languages presented serious difficulties. The Unesco document Guide for the preparation of authors' abstracts for publication was referred to.

It was pointed out that, in spite of previous efforts to obtain uniformity in bibliographical presentation, agreement had not yet been reached on even simple problems (e.g. the presentation of the date).

Unesco could improve communication about journal practices, for example, it had resources to carry out some comparative study of the subject and could publish material in the Unesco bulletin for libraries.

Abstracting and indexing services

The Symposium considered a number of matters concerning abstracts journals, in particular the question of Spanish language abstracting, the need for better coverage by abstracts journals of the less well-known journals and closer co-operation between the English-language abstracts journals.

It was noted that, although there were three major abstracting services in English, the number of periodicals common to all three was only 51 titles. The desirability of avoiding overlapping and having only one English-language service was discussed, but a U.S. participant pointed out that the objective in each case was to provide a particular service to customers.

A report from a special working party which met twice immediately before the sessions recommended that Unesco should support a statistical study of the primary literature in the field and a comparative study of the major abstracting and indexing services (Library and information science abstracts, Information science abstracts, Referativnyj shurnal: Informatics, Bulletin signaletique, Library literature, etc.), and should convene a meeting of editors and publishers of such services; also that countries without an indexing or abstracting service should be encouraged by Unesco to set up such services to cover their national literature in the field; at least an indexing service should be set up.

It was reported by a participant from the Federal Republic of Germany that the Institut für Dokumentationswesen (Frankfurt/Main), and the Zentralstelle für maschinelle Dokumentation (Frankfurt/Main) were willing to provide a service for converting existing data bases in documentation, librarianship and archives to machine-readable form and to provide a printed output. In view of the complex storage and translation problems it was thought better to keep this service at the indexing level.

When discussing the question of Spanish language abstracting some participants thought the Bulletin signalétique might extend its coverage to more material on "applied librarianship" (French being possibly a more accessible language in Spanish-speaking countries) or that Library and information science abstracts (LISA) might include more material of Spanish and Latin American relevance with the aid of Unesco financial support. Latin American groups should send more material for LISA to abstract.

It was reported that the University of Bahia Blanca in Argentina, in co-operation with the Oficina de Educación Iberoamericana (Madrid) and the Instituto Bibliográfico Hispanico (Madrid) were at present considering a current contents service which will cover the major profession journals.

The representatives of the FID and the Brasilian participant said this whole question could be discussed at the next meeting of the FID/Latin American Commission in September.

Several participants supported the need for regional abstracting services.

The question of the creation of a world-wide abstracting or indexing service, possibly by means of shared responsibility was raised and it was suggested that Unesco carry out a feasibility study of such a service based upon a survey of the primary literature in the field.

A U.S. delegate suggested that the primary source study include questions of language and terminology and the possibility of a concordance as a future aid to indexing and abstracting. It was assumed that the study would cover the need for national and regional indexing services. The consequent need for effective practical manuals in order to achieve consistency and international compatibility, essential for machine operations, was stressed.

International co-operation

The main types of editorial co-operation were noted as :

1. Bilateral;
2. Multilateral or regional;
3. International through NGOs;
4. Direct measures by Unesco.

The Symposium thought that the interchange of news items needed to be encouraged and suggested that periodicals might "twin" like cities in Europe. To help editors of journals outside Europe, it was also suggested that the Unesco bulletin for libraries should carry a section dealing with problems of periodicals editing. A participant from the USSR made several suggestions including some for the improvement of the work of the Unesco bulletin for libraries, and for Unesco support for an international translation office.

Several delegates asked Unesco to support regional meetings of editors, particularly in developing regions. A U.S. delegate urged Unesco to institute a travelling lectureship which would enable on the spot consultancy of benefit to local editors.

On the question of an association of editors, the view was strongly expressed by several delegates that this was not at the moment opportune and that there was here a rôle for the competent NGOs. Existing NGOs co-operation was noted, particularly that of editors of archives journals who meet at regular intervals. The Symposium welcomed a suggestion made by the FID representative of a joint meeting in The Hague of representatives of relevant NGOs to discuss problems of editing journals in the field. It was hoped that such meetings could be organized regularly.

Unesco planned to extend the help it could give to enable developing countries to work more effectively within NGOs.

Other points

Other points in discussion included the importance of good indexing practices by professional journals, the problems of journals in developing countries (shortage of articles, part-time editorial work, printing difficulties) and an account of the work of ELSE, the European Association of Editors of Biological Periodicals (European Life Science Editors, ELSE), the difficulties of refereeing foreign research papers and the need for care in the writing of articles about the domestic field in foreign journals.

RECOMMENDATIONS

At its final session, the Symposium adopted the following recommendations :

1. editors should quote always the original source of any article republished or translated, noting title changes, within copyright requirements;

2. editors be urged to accept the abbreviations of titles and ISSN to be formulated by ISDS in collaboration with ISO and with the competent national bodies;

3. national meetings of editors should be organized;

4. a practical guide to the various relevant ISO standards should be published;

5. Unesco should undertake a study of the presentation of periodicals in the field; a statistical study of the primary literature in the field and a comparative study of the major abstracting and indexing services; a feasibility study of an indexing or abstracting network based upon a survey of the world's primary literature in the field;

6. countries without an indexing or abstracting service should be encouraged by Unesco to set up such services to cover their national literature in the field: at least an indexing service should be set up. Such services could be either national or regional;

7. taking into account the needs of developing countries, Unesco should encourage the extension of the practice of publishing in primary periodicals abstracts of articles in at least one of the widely-known languages;

8. Unesco should organize a meeting of editors and publishers of the major abstracting and indexing services and a symposium similar to the present one, not later than 1974.
